

Puberty PrepTM for Pro-active Parents by GIRL·ology[®]

*"She's not a baby anymore... where's all the help and advice now?"
(says every mom we know)*

Raising a daughter through the challenging years of puberty & adolescence didn't come with a guide. So, we built it.

Our Puberty Prep ebook will help prepare you - so you're ready when she is! As early as 3rd grade, some girls will begin to show signs of puberty. Knowing what's ahead will help her navigate body changes with less anxiety and more confidence.

As two physician moms with 5 daughters between us, we are here to help you build a stronger mother-daughter connection, be her best guide, and raise a confident, informed and healthy girl.

Trish & Melisa

Trish (pediatrician) & Melisa (pediatric & adolescent gyn)
Girlology Co-Founders

FEAR LESS. KNOW MORE.TM

Did You Know?

®

THE VERY 1ST SIGN OF PUBERTY IS RAPID GROWTH OF FEET & HANDS!

After that,

85% of girls start with breast buds

76% of girls report schools teach them more about the biology of frogs than the human female body.

99% of girls experience mood swings during puberty.

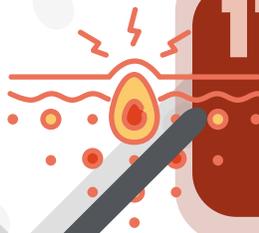

< 1 minute

the average time healthcare providers spend discussing puberty at well child visits.

11 years

the average age girls develop acne

1985

The first time someone said the word "period" on national television. The word was banned on TV until 1972! (btw, Courtney Cox said it first!)

88% OF MOMS

ARE CONCERNED ABOUT THEIR DAUGHTER'S CONFIDENCE & BODY IMAGE.

Puberty Prep[™] for Pro-active Parents

What's Inside?

What should I do FIRST?

What IS puberty, anyway?

A Puberty Timeline

What are other parents asking?

Myths Busted

Where to Find Support

What Should I Do FIRST?

Step 1: Prepare Yourself

Your Puberty vs HERS

How did you feel about YOUR OWN puberty?

frustrated

confused worried embarrassed

clueless pleased excited

What made it feel that way?

If you want her to feel...

calm informed supported confident

excited

Here's how you can prepare (and we're here to help)

- Unpack as much shame & embarrassment as you can. If you need help from a friend or even a professional, it's worth it!
- Get comfortable using correct words for all of her body parts.
- Learn the facts about what's ahead for her (keep reading).
- Practice some parenting skills that help you stay calm when she's not (we have tips).
- Choose a positive mindset before you start talking to her.

What Should I Do FIRST?

Step 2: Work On Your Words

PROTECT HER

Children who know the proper names for the parts of their genitals are less likely to experience childhood sexual abuse.

CREATE BODY AGENCY

Knowing her body and how it works helps her feel more in control of it and provides the language to communicate more effectively about her body.

BOOST CONFIDENCE

Children love learning about their bodies - ALL of their parts! Body knowledge builds body confidence by raising awareness and reducing confusion.

NIX the Nicknames

It's not a front fanny, a pee pee, a coochie, a cookie, or a hoo ha. It's not even a vagina.

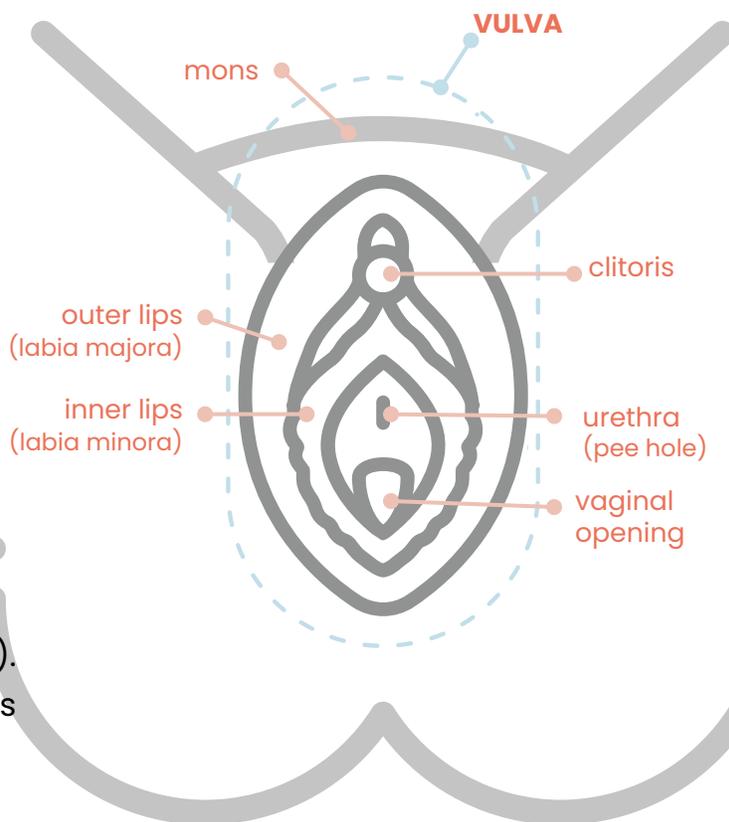

Just like you taught her the correct names for the parts of her face, you can also teach her the correct names for the parts of her VULVA.

That's right -- VULVA.

Everything "down there" is not a vagina. The vagina is mostly inside the body, so it's just the vaginal opening that's "down there."

So, teach her that her VULVA is the name for all the private parts down below, and it has lots of parts like the mons, clitoris, outer lips, inner lips, and two openings: the urethra (for pee) and the vagina (where babies come out).

While you're at it, don't forget to teach her anus (which is not part of the vulva), and breasts (which...oh you know where those are!).

What Should I Do FIRST?

Step 3: Practice Your Positivity

As she becomes a big kid, she will be more affected by big emotions -- hers and yours. This is a perfect time to practice strategies that will help you model calm and respectful communication in the years ahead. It doesn't mean ignoring difficulties, it just means learning to manage them with language and actions that reflect the caring, capable, and supportive adult that you want to be for her.

When she's curious, join her!

When she asks you a question that you're not ready for - don't panic! Her curiosity is natural and healthy (and she's getting old enough to know when you're not being truthful)!

So take a deep breath, and get curious about HER curiosity. Ask her what made her think to ask that? What does she already know about that? Then fill in the gaps with the truth. If you need help, you can both head to Girlology to watch a class!

She stinks, but you don't want to embarrass her.

Potty humor and teasing are fun occasionally, but when it comes to a her changing body, remember that her brain is instinctively dialing up her sensitivity and self-consciousness. It's perfectly fine to let her know she's sending out some strong new odors, but tell her privately, normalize it, and offer some matter-of-fact advice that will help her feel aware and confident. It's better for her to hear it from you than as a joke among her peers.

You had a horrible puberty experience.

As an adult, sometimes we need to accept the things we can't change, and commit to creating a better future for the kids we love. Decide now that you will make your child's experience better by preparing yourself and preparing her for all that's ahead. She wants to know she's ok, she's normal, and she's not alone. Remind her that these changes are a sign of healthy growth, and show her that she has YOU as a trusted guide.

Her BIG emotions are making YOU emotional!

Eyeroles and moodiness can bring out the big emotions in all of us! There will definitely be MORE before it gets better, so the best strategy is to commit to becoming the calm presence in her life. Breathe. Walk away. Count to ten. Practice listening without judgment. Respond with a calm face and voice. It takes practice, but it makes a world of difference in keeping you connected.

What IS Puberty, Anyway?

There's more to this story, but here's a simple science lesson!

Puberty is more than a couple of points in time; it's a transition that takes 5+ years when a child's body morphs into a more adult-like body. The whole process is controlled by hormones -- which do not actually rage, but they travel through the body as chemical messengers, directing a super complicated brain & body construction project. The whole purpose of puberty is to make it possible to reproduce the species (have babies), so puberty isn't just for humans, many animals also go through puberty, too!

Puberty starts in the brain

with the release of Gonadotropin Releasing Hormone (GnRH)

That word literally means "grow some gonads!"

In females gonads are ovaries.

GnRH travels to the Pituitary Gland (also in the brain)

GnRH says,

"Release the gonad-growing hormones!"

The Pituitary Gland sends out FSH & LH

FSH = Follicle Stimulating Hormone
LH = Luteinizing Hormone

In Females, FSH & LH go to the ovaries

The ovaries begin to release estrogen & progesterone (and a bit of testosterone) which cause lots of body changes and eventually the release of eggs through the menstrual cycle.

What Does ALL THAT Mean?

Her brain is growing & changing for most girls, that means...

- Her emotions change faster & feel bigger.
- She can think more abstractly.
- She seeks new experiences that are exciting for her.
- She wants more independence.
- She becomes more self-reflective & self critical.
- She wants to fit in but also be unique.
- She may begin to feel new & different attractions.
- She can build or lose self-confidence.
- She will be at higher risk for mental health struggles.

Her body is growing & changing

- Breasts grow and may be tender or sore
- Body hair grows
- She will likely begin new hygiene routines to manage acne, body odor, body hair, vaginal discharge & periods
- Her body shape will change and so will her balance
- She will grow taller right before your eyes
- She will begin menstruating
- She will grow some more

Oh, and she'll need a lot of new shoes and clothes.

...and YOU are her biggest INFLUENCER

Are you ready?

We're here to help you navigate all of it!

Keep reading!

A Puberty Timeline

Know What's Ahead

Most girls have similar body changes in puberty, but each will develop on her own unique schedule and with her own unique body. Most will begin puberty sometime between ages 8 and 12.

This timeline shows what changes you can expect and in what order. Some girls start with the "androgen" changes instead of the "estrogen" changes, but other than that, the order is similar for everyone.

The ORDER of things

brain says "Go!"

hands & feet grow fast

the "real" first sign

breast buds
vaginal discharge

changes caused by ESTROGENS

body odor pubic hair oily skin, acne

changes
caused by ANDROGENS

rapid growth spurt

the most accurate predictor of her first period

first period

curves

more brain changes

ta da!!

breast development begins at an average age of 9-10, but the normal range is 8-12

It takes 1.5-3 years
from breast buds to first period

first periods begin at an average age of 12, but the normal range is 9-15

moods can be big and change fast

What moms are asking

ISN'T SHE TOO YOUNG?

Children of all ages are naturally curious about bodies and how they work, so that's a great place to start young. Unlike older kids and adults, children don't sexualize their body parts or puberty, so talking openly may feel more comfortable for them than for you.

HOW DO I KNOW SHE'S READY TO LEARN ABOUT PUBERTY?

There are many signs that it's time! Are her classmates showing signs of puberty? Has she been wanting more privacy? Are you noticing body odor? breasts budding? vaginal discharge? Or is she in late 3rd grade or beyond? All of those are great times to offer details that will prepare and reassure her!

HOW DO I AVOID GIVING HER TOO MUCH INFORMATION?

The goal with young ones is to keep your chats short and simple. They'll let you know if it's too much by losing interest or moving on to another curiosity.

WHAT IF SHE'S RESISTANT?

There are different reasons why some girls avoid chats about changing bodies. Provide some reassurance that you're there for her when she's ready. You can jumpstart fun conversations and boost her curiosity by sharing a few fun facts you are learning from this ebook.

WHAT IF I DON'T KNOW THE ANSWERS TO HER QUESTIONS?

It's ok if you don't know all the answers! Tell her you're glad she came to you with her question and you'll find the answer together. When it comes to questions about her body, health & wellness, make sure she knows the importance of using trusted resources (not Dr. Google or random influencers). Girlology is here as that resource for thousands of moms & girls throughout the country.

Puberty Myths – BUSTED!

Her moodiness is caused by raging hormones!

Hormones don't rage! Her moods are affected by her very real emotions and changes in the way her brain is wired.

Pimples mean she's not washing her face well enough.

Pimples mean she's a blooming adolescent with oilier skin and a genetic predisposition.

She won't get any taller after she starts her period.

Sure she will. Her growth just slows down a lot. Expect 1-3 inches more.

Vaginal discharge means her period will start soon.

Nope. It's an early puberty thing that begins shortly after breasts bud. Both are caused by estrogen.

Puberty lasts about 2 years.

For girls, it's more like 5+ years!

Girls don't stink.

Oh yes they do. New sweat, oils, and bacteria create the odors especially in their pits & privates! Good thing there's an easy solution!

Most girls start their first period around the same age as their mother.

BOTH parents' genetics affect the timing of her development. She will actually follow an older sister more closely than her mother. If she doesn't have an older sister - she may surprise you!

During puberty, a knot under the nipple is not normal

Knots are how the breasts "bud." One side may bud well before the other.

Where to Find Support

YOUR VILLAGE

Check in with your friends, especially those with children a year or two ahead of yours. Ask them to share the challenges and victories they're having, as well as what teen trends parents are talking about in your village. Knowing what's "out there" can help you be more pro-active in keeping her prepared and protected.

YOUR CHILD'S DOCTOR

But when it comes to making decisions about her health and wellness, don't compromise by trusting what you hear from others or find online. Her doctor is the best source for medically accurate recommendations based on her individual medical history.

GIRLOLOGY

Our girls' health & wellness videos + expert mom-to-mom coaching give you both "bite size" support on every essential topic exactly when you need it.

What's next? Check out our ready-made playlists designed to help you navigate each grade-level. Our Welcome video & Quick Start Guide give you next-step clarity on when and how to begin and what resources we have for you and her at each age and stage.

Get immediate access to 500+ physician-designed resources and grade-level playlists.